Abstract: This thesis is a case study of how two cyberspace environments (i.e., one online and the other offline) interact. This study explores the activities and behaviour of an individual with autism in each context. The individual is Johanna who is between the ages of 11 and 12. This age range is chosen because it is often understood that, at this age, individuals on the autism spectrum become less constrained in certain environments and in this context, play on the Internet is one of these environments. Johanna's behaviours were observed by a social worker in her remote village in Canada where Johanna lives with her aunt, who is a single mother of four, another aunt, and a cousin. The'sheepdogging' method was used to assess Johanna's functioning in the remote village; this method is a qualitative method in which social workers observe a person for a period of time to get an idea of that person's behaviour in a real world setting (Wetterman, 2007). The results indicate that Johanna did not engage in real world activities in the rural village. Johanna did engage in activities online, especially on the Internet, where she was required to play a cyber-game called Kijiji. Also, she took notes on her computer about what she was learning at the time. Unfortunately, no notes were taken in the rural village. Johanna also had conversations with her cousin who lives a few houses away. The online conversations were brief, lasting for less than a minute, with the exception of a few conversations that lasted as long as 40 minutes. In these conversations, Johanna was able to convey much of what she learned on the Internet. However, during these online conversations, Johanna's non-verbal communication was not covered, as this was only observed when she was playing online. The social worker was unable to communicate with Johanna in the rural village. The lack of non-verbal communication affected the social worker's observations and impacted what was learned. Given the time constraints of the visit, the social worker was not able to cover all aspects of Johanna's online behaviour, specifically in the Kijiji cyber-game. This is important, as it shows that Johanna's use of the Internet in this context is casual and of less importance than the online conversations she had with other individuals.A monoclonal antibody specific for the VP2 protein of Japanese encephalitis virus induces protective immunity in mice.
